Introduction.

—o—

THE general introduction to the present publication will deal with the religious history of France from the point of view of the influence of that history upon the ebb and flow of the various streams of migration as evidenced in the lists of naturalized persons. As the present volume is only the first instalment covering the 17th century and is to be followed by a second volume which will cover the 18th century, it is impossible to give the general introduction until the second volume is in print.

For the moment therefore the present introduction is confined to two technical points, viz., (1) the law of naturalization and denization, and (2) the description of the record sources from which all the contents of this work are drawn, and to which any person must go if he wishes to verify or amplify the information which it gives.

THE LAW OF NATURALIZATION AND DENIZATION.

The mediæval conception of nationality, national sovereignty and national allegiance forms one of the most striking distinctions between the Classical and the modern world. At first sight there would appear to be much in Greek law which could be held to correspond to the modern law of naturalization and denization. The μέτοικος is a resident alien (primarily a merchant) enjoying a certain amount of protection from the state, just as the mediæval alien merchant did from the kings of mediæval Europe. And when the μέτοικος was granted the ισοτέλεια by decree of the people he was as it were endenized, made into something like (but not quite or completely like) a citizen. And again the Athenian κληρουχία form of colony (in which the settlers although constituted a separate community still continued to be Athenian citizens with all rights and duties as such) comes in some sense near the 17th century conception of an English Plantation in America.

But between the Greek and the modern conception there lies the fundamental difference between the mere conception of a citizen state and that of a nationality. A Greek of Euboea was not an alien in Athens in the sense in which a Polish Jew is an alien in England to day. Nor was a Greek state an entity in the sense in which a modern national state is. It contained within itself a graded series of classes ranging from the full citizen to the slave. The compulsive and unifying influence of the idea of sovereignty never welded this composite structure into a homogeneous entity as far as the Greek world was concerned. And when in the Roman world the idea of sovereignty in the modern juristic sense was evolved by the growth of the Empire, the conception took a totally different form from that of the modern national sovereignty. From first to last the idea of citizenship in the Roman state centred round the idea of the patria potestas, and whether the distinction was as between Roman and Latin or peregrinus, or as between Roman and Dalmatian or Parthian, the distinction still follows this purely personal line of cleavage. The law of it is part of the domain of the law of the person. The Roman state was not determined by its geographical boundaries. Neither geography nor ethnography entered into the conception of it. Within its bounds were comprehended every species and grade of personal and racial status; and all the while the true and essential Roman state itself was an entity within an entity, it was a class (cives Romani) scattered about within the territorial confines.

Between such a conception of a state and the modern territorial conception of a state as determined by national sovereignty, in which allegiance is co-terminus with the boundaries of the state, and within which there is no difference of allegiance status, there is an unbridgeable gulf. If ever that gulf is bridged it will be only by means of the study of the institutional and constitutional history of the Eastern Empire which in all probability furnished to the embryo nationalities of 9th century Europe the germs of much of their later institutions whether administrative or juristic.

The treatment therefore of the subject of the law of naturalization and denization can only commence with the mediæval state, the mediæval law and the mediæval conception of sovereignty.

ENGLISH NATURALIZATION LAW.

Allegiance is co-terminous with dominion and is an inalienable possession of sovereignty, or as it was anciently expressed, is part of the kingly prerogative. Like many other phases of the prerogative royal the sovereign's right to the allegiance of all the subjects of his dominions needs not to be expressed, it is so ancient, natural and unchallengable. But when the king's dominions are contracted or expanded as the result of loss or conquest, then this branch of the prerogative royal needs to be applied; ergo it needs to be expressed and so it becomes a maxim of state and of the common law of the land.

In English history this expression or formulation is first traceable in the reign of Edward I. as a result of the loss of the French possessions.

Capitula itineris (? Edw. I., Statutes of the Realm I., p. 234.)

Inquiry is to be made of those who hold the lands of Normans, Flemings and Bretons and other strangers, of what fee they be and by what warrant they hold them, whether of the king or of others upon whom the king has conferred such fees

Capitula escaetriae (ibid., p. 240, ? Edw. I.)

Inquiry is to be made of the lands and tenements of Normans, Jews, Scots and others whomsoever born out of the king's allegiance, who occupied same, under what colour, etc.

Praerogativa regis (ibid. p. 226 ? 17 Edw. II.)

§xiv : as to escheats of lands descended to aliens : the king shall have escheats of lands of Normans and where any inheritance descends to any born beyond the seas whose ancestors were from the time of John under the allegiance of the king of France.

It was perfectly natural and in keeping with the most permanent characteristic of English Common Law that such formulation should have reference to the possession of land and that the right to hold lands under the king should be denied to Normans, Flemings, Jews, Scots and others whomsoever born out of allegiance.

In the reign of Edw. III. a different question arose. In consequence of plague and war many of the king's subjects had sojourned abroad and there had children born to them. Accordingly in the parliament of 17 Edw. III. debate was held as to the doubts which such births might cause in inheritance to lands. It was decided that the king's sons could undoubtedly inherit wherever they were born, and as to other persons it was accorded that such could inherit who were born (of parents) in the king's service beyond seas. The question as to the remainder who were not so born was remitted to the succeeding parliament for maturer consideration. (Rolls of Parliament II. p. 129). The matter was not debated again until 25 Edw. III. when the well known Act was passed declaring children born beyond sea to parents within the allegiance to be capable of inheriting. (ibid., II. p. 231; Statutes of the Realm I. p. 310; 25 Edw. III., Stat. I).

Debated and all assented; the law of England is and always has been that the children of the kings of England in whatever parts born in England or elsewhere are able to inherit after the death of their ancestor.

Of other children born out of allegiance in the time of the king, parliament of one mind accorded that Henry, son of John of Beamond, Elizabeth, daughter of Guy de Bryan, Giles, son of Ralph Dawbeny and others which the king shall name which were born beyond the sea out of leageance shall be from henceforth able to enjoy their inheritance after the death of their ancestors in all parts of England; and that all children inheritors which from henceforth shall be born without the allegiance whose fathers and mothers at the time of their (the children's) birth be and shall be in the allegiance shall have and enjoy the same benefits and advantages, to have the inheritance within the legiance as the other inheritors aforesaid in time to come:—so always [provided] that the mothers of such children do pass the sea by the licence and will of their husbands.

This statute was in effect confirmed by 42 Edw. III. (Statute of Westminster: Statutes of the Realm I. p. 389.)

§10. Upon petition put in by the Commons desiring that infants born beyond sea within the seignories of Calais (Guisnes and Gascony) and elsewhere within the lands and seignories pertaining to the king beyond the sea be as able of their inheritance as other infants born within the realm, it is accorded that the Common law and the statute upon the same point another time made [i.e. the above Act of 25 Edw. III.] be holden [i.e. maintained.]

So far the question of making pure foreigners into native subjects has not been touched upon legislatively. The first discoverable instance of such making a foreigner into an Englishman is that of Elias Daubeney in 1295, (23 Edw. I.). This instance takes the form of a grant of the king's grace. (Rolls of Parliament I. 135.) The king holds him as an Englishman and wishes that every one else in the kingdom should hold him as an Englishman also. There is therefore so far no definition of the circle of rights conferred, no mention of the word denizen, and no formal grant whether by patent or by Act of parliament. The later distinction between denization and naturalization, between the grant by patent based on the royal prerogative and the grant by Act of Parliament has not yet emerged.

The next discoverable instance is separated from the above by a gap of more than a century and it is evident that in the intervening period much formulation has occurred both as to the rights conferred and as to the authority conferring. The king has granted letters patent to make David Holbache (a loyal Welshman who has lost his lands in Wales) capable like other liege subjects in England and of being of the King's Council and of purchasing lands in England within towns or outside them and of doing all other things which liege subjects can do (Rolls of Parliament III. p. 590, 600, 748 Hy. IV., 1406.)

As this grant by letters patent was contrary to the Act of 2 Hy. IV. (see below) the grant is confirmed by Act of Parliament in the same year 1406.

So far as concerns the nature of the rights conferred the generally stereotyped formula of later times appears as early as 1423 in the instance of Jaquetta, Duchess of Gloucester (2 Hy. VI., ibid. IV., p. 242; Rymer X., p. 311.) Her grant confers all the rights of subjects, of purchasing lands to her and her heirs and of suing and being sued in all the Courts of the land. But as far as concerns the authority conferring these rights the confusion or want of demarcation between the authority of the king and that of the Parliament still remains. The general method of grant is for parliament, on the individual's petition, to ordain that letters patent of the king be passed under the great seal. The idea therefore that there are two sources from which native's rights can be obtained is still non-existent and the distinction between denization and naturalization is also still non-existent. For the sake of convenience I relegate to a footnote such subsequent cases of early denizations as are discoverable.*

- 1430-1. W. Claydon, an alien. (9 Hy. VI., ibid., p. 387. Act of parliament to confirm letters patent granted by Hy. V.)

It seems likely that the distinction between denization and naturalization which characterises the law of the subject from the 17th century onwards owes its origin to clauses of limitation in the grants. In the case of Henry Hansforth in 1431 (see footnote iv. supra) the grant as passed by parliament conferred full rights and that he should pay scot and lot and all customs, taxes, etc. like natives. When the king passed the bill he completely reversed this last proviso "Let it be done as is desired on condition that the suppliant pay customs, subsidies and other dues to the king like strangers." (Strangers' or aliens' customs were double the native customs.)

As far as the Rolls of Parliament are concerned this is the only entry discoverable before the times of the Tudors of such limitation; though it is unlikely that it stands alone. Such limiting clauses spring directly from the interest which the Crown had in increasing the yield of the Customs and as a consequence in fostering and protecting the trading of alien merchants, all which interests were most ancient and undoubted parts of the prerogative royal.

By making an alien merchant into a native merchant the king lost half the Customs on the trade of that merchant. When therefore under the Tudors we find the prerogative exalted completely above the parliament we should expect to find, and we do find, that the making of aliens into natives is performed mainly by the king and not by the legislature, by letters patent and not by Act of parliament and further that the grants contain preponderatingly this clause of reservation as to the payment of customs like aliens.

Conversely when towards the end of Elizabeth's reign there appears a rejuvenescence of parliamentary life we should expect to find, and we do find, that parliament would re-assert its title to share in the work of making aliens into natives and that it would tend to revert to the unfettered, unconditioned type of grant which had prevailed in pre-Tudor times. But the Crown was not thereby stripped of its prerogative even in the exalted form to which it had grown under Tudor usurpation. Accordingly whereas before the Tudors there had been a single act performed indiscriminately and jointly by king and parliament and a single type of grant conferred (the making of a foreigner into a full Englishman) after the Tudors there is a double act performed and a double type of grant conferred, the one by the king granting denization, the other by the parliament granting naturalizations. *

It is important to bear in mind what is the real nature of the distinction which was thus at last formulated, i.e. between naturalization and denization. The general explanation given is that naturalization conferred full rights including the most cherished right of all, that of purchasing, holding and transmitting lands: while denization conferred only restricted rights. In especial it did not confer this right as to lands. This explanation is an untrue one for all the period prior to the Stuarts. Indeed it is an untrue one altogether. And in addition it does not touch the essential point of the distinction between the two. When the two forms of grant had become stereotyped (from the time of the Stuarts onwards) the real distinction between them is that grants of denization originated from the king (or the executive) and were an act of the prerogative or of the executive while grants of naturalization originated with the parliament and were an act of the legislative. The fact that the one grant (denization) came generally to confer only restricted rights while the other (naturalization) conferred full rights was a mere accident and was due to the unfettered nature of the prerogative or of the power of the executive. In making his grants of denization by letters patent the king (the executive) could put into the grant what he pleased or keep out of it what he pleased. He could grant the right of paying only natives' or single customs; he could refuse that right and make the denizen pay aliens' duties; he could grant the right to purchase and hold lands; he could withhold that right; he could insist on residence or he could dispense with it; he could restrict the occupation of the denizen so as to forbid him for instance to be a master of a ship and so on and so on. For the sake of convenience I relegate to a footnote the scattered references to such orders (whether of the executive or of the Parliament) relating to clauses of exception in grants of denization or to the forms of such grants as are of too minor importance to be noticed in the text.*

* All through the Tudor period the grants of letters patent by the king to foreigners are very numerous but the parliamentary Acts are exceedingly few: 4 in the reign of Hy. VIII.; 2 in that of Edw. VI.; 1 in that of Mary; 12 in that of Elizabeth. The first of these Acts in which the word "naturalizing" occurs is that of 23 Eliz. (1580-1.) As these Acts are abstracted in vol. VIII. of the Huguenot Society's publications I only print here such names as are accidentally omitted from that publication.

His motive is always the same and throughout the whole of English history goes unchallenged. That motive was simply regard to his customs revenue or to some national or trade prejudice or jealousy. In the present volume will be found hundreds of letters patents of denization conveying full rights including the right of holding lands and on the other hand there will be found also every possible type or clause of restriction. But ever and always it must be born in mind that wherever restrictions are found in the prerogative grants they are an after thought. When a person was made denizen by patent the intention was to make him an Englishman not half an Englishman or three-quarters an Englishman and the word denizen is never used legally as implying a class of Englishmen with restricted rights. For instance when in the latter half of Elizabeth's reign naturalization Acts specifically so called come into vogue the words naturalization and denization are used as interchangeable and equivalent terms. The first occasion on which the term naturalization is employed is in 1581 (23 Eliz.) but as late as 1601 (43 Eliz.) the term denization is still employed in an Act of parliament. To make a foreigner a denizen or to naturalize him were therefore the same thing and both meant to make him mere English. Similarly in the great discussion on the Post nati after the accession of James I. the word denization is employed throughout. The word naturalization does not occur.

- 7 & 8 Wm. III. c 22. (For preventing frauds in Plantation trade) places of trust in Courts of law or treasury of the Plantations are to be in the hands of native born subjects of England or Ireland or of the said Islands.
- 14 Geo. III., c 84. An act to prevent certain inconveniences that may happen by bills of naturalization. Whereas it has been found that many persons born out of the allegiance of the Crown of Great Britain obtain bills of naturalization for the purpose of availing themselves in foreign countries of the immunities and indulgences belonging to His Majesty's trading subjects by treaties, and in order to apply such immunities to promote the trade of the Country to which such naturalized persons originally belonged and not with any design of fixing their residence in Great Britain or of becoming useful subjects thereof: it is therefore enacted that hereafter in naturalization bills there shall be a clause that such person shall not thereby obtain any of the immunities or indulgences in trade enjoyed by natural born British subjects by treaty or otherwise unless they have resided in Great Britain or the dominions 7 years subsequent to the 1st day of the session in which their naturalization bill pass without being absent more than 2 months at any one time during the said 7 years.

The only point in the discussion was whether Scotchmen born after the king's accession were or should be mere English or not. If there had been a distinction between a foreigner made denizen and a foreigner naturalized that distinction would have been bound to emerge in the course of the discussion and it would also have complicated that discussion. But it does not appear at all.

The point here laboured is a technical one but in view of the misstatements which are current it is not unimportant. Any independent state can regulate as it pleases the terms on which it will admit foreigners to citizenship; and if there are two channels by which the grant of citizenship can be obtained the restrictions, if any, can be imposed in either or both of these channels. There is no legal reason whatever why a naturalization Act in the Stuart or Hanoverian period should not have contained the restrictions which are so commonly found in co-eval patent grants of denization. The only reason why such restrictions are absent from the one and frequently present in the other is a practical one. The action of the executive (the prerogative) was less fettered by form than was the action of the parliament so the latter becomes stereotyped while the former remains elastic. Having originated in this way the distinction between denization and naturalization endured until modern times and has only become practically (though not legally) extinct today as a result of the unifying influence of the legislation on this subject from 1844 onwards.

So much for the mere technicality of definition or nomenclature. As to the history of this subject we are reduced for a long period to practically one guide—the Statute Book. After the legislation of Edw. III. referred to above, the first Act bearing on this question of allegiance is that of 2 Hy. IV., c 12 which forbade Welshmen born in Wales of Welsh father and mother to purchase lands or tenements in certain merchant towns joining to the Marches of Wales or to be citizen or burgess in any city, borough or merchant town and all Welshmen in any such places are to give surety.

In the early denizations of Welshmen given in the footnote supra p. iv. the effect of this Act was overridden by a non obstante. (This Act was repealed by 21 James I., c 28.) In this connexion the following ordinance is of interest:

1444, 23 Hy. VI. Petition to parliament from the mayor, &c. of the English towns in the parts of N. Wales. Edw. I. made laws for Wales after the conquest, which are in the Exchequer at Carnarvon. Hy. IV. after Owen Glendower's rebellion [in the 2nd year of his reign] made divers ordinances and statutes against Welshmen. Now divers Welshmen sue to be denizens which would be to the utter destruction of all Englishmen. They therefore pray that all laws against Welshmen be confirmed and that no Welshman of the whole blood or half blood on the father's side from 1st Feb., 24 Hy. VI., be made denizen, or English, or have patent of office in Wales, except William Bulkely of English father and mother born in England and married to a women of half blood Welsh, and Griffith ap Nicholas whose bills have passed the Commons. To all which reply is made "Let the Statutes of Edw., Hy. IV. and Hy. V. be kept and observed." (Rolls of parliament V., 104.)

The next Act of formal importance is that of 21 Hy. VIII., c 16 ratifying a decree in the Star Chamber requiring aliens whether denizens or not, remaining in England to swear allegiance to the king. (A second version of this Act adds the phrase "prior to being admitted to the several Companies.")

Save on the question of aliens' rights and duties, which will be treated later, the remainder of the Tudor period is devoid of any general legislation on this subject of the law of naturalization.*

But with the reign of James I., a new departure was taken. Under the influence of anti-Catholic feeling the taking the oath of Allegiance and Supremacy was extended to naturalized persons. The Act of 7 James I., c 2 required that all such as are to be naturalized or restored in blood should first receive the Sacrament and take the oath of Allegiance and the oath of Supremacy when 18 years of age. The Lord Chancellor for the Lords and the Speaker of the House of Commons for the Commons were to have authority to administer such oaths during the session of parliament. Until the advent of the modern legislation and spirit this feature remained henceforward an essential part of the procedure of naturalization.

The Act of 29 Car. II., c 6 marks a second legislative departure. For the first time since the days of Edw. III. a general naturalization bill was passed by both Houses, but it was only general in a restricted domain. As will be seen in a moment it was confined practically to persons of English descent. More than this indeed it was impossible to expect of the English parliament for that body was permeated, even more than the English kings themselves, with a spirit of the narrowest and most jealous nationalism. Time and time again between 1660 and 1710 attempts were made to pass through parliament a true general naturalization bill, one that is which should apply to all foreigners. A chapter could be written on the subject, for the disjected members of these abortive bills are strewn over hundreds of pages of the Journals of both Houses.†

But where the legislative proved itself so obdurate and insular the executive showed itself more generous and enlightened. When the tide of Huguenot emigration came in a flood the forms of denization procedure were relaxed and leave was granted by order in Council (1681, July 28) for the wholesale grants of denizations without the payment of any fee. This matter is sufficiently explained on pp 124-5 of the present volume and I allude to it here only as evidencing the difference in matter of generosity between the spirit which animated the executive and that which ruled in parliament.

To return to the Act of 29 Car. II., c 6. After reciting that many English subjects had been obliged to reside abroad during the Civil War and Commonwealth period and that it might become difficult to prove the occasion of such their residence, the Act proceeded to naturalize Charles and Elizabeth children of Charles, Lord Gerard of Brandon, Trevor Wheler and

† For the purposes of this present volume interest centres chiefly round the legislative attempts at a general bill for the naturalizing Protestants which recurred periodically in 1679, 1680-90, 1693-8, the references to which in vol. XIII. seq. of the Lords Journals and vol. IX. seq. of the Commons Journals are too numerous to quote. These attempts have reference entirely to the Huguenot immigrations.

INTRODUCTION.

Dorothy Elizabeth Wheler children of Sir Charles Wheler, Anne Ravenscroft wife of Edward Ravenscroft of Bretton, Co. Flint, one of the daughters of Sir Richard Lloyd and born at Calais in France and all other persons who at any time between the 14th of June, 1641 and the 24th of March, 1660-1 were born out of the king's dominions whose fathers and mothers were natural born subjects. Such persons were within 7 years next ensuing to take the Sacrament and within one month thereafter the oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy in some of his Majesty's Courts at Westminster, delivering into court at the same time a certificate of such his receiving the Sacrament and making proof thereof by witnesses to be examined viva voce on oath. Upon such proof such person was to receive a certificate under the seal of such court and the said certificate was to be enrolled in the said court.

The importance of this Act lies in the fact that it furnished the model for the later legislation of William III. and Anne.

The Act of 9 Wm. III., c. 20, is almost identical in its bearing with that of Charles II. The preamble of the Act declares that during the late wars with France divers of the king's subjects attended him in Flanders and resided abroad, wherefore it is enacted that Francis Colenbine and Ventris Colenbine sons of Col. Ventris Colenbine and Barbara his wife, Robert Wroth son of Lieut. Col. Robert Wroth and Knightley his wife, John Gisbert Farwell an infant son of Lieut. Col. John Farwell and Elizabeth his wife, Thomas Uthwat son of Richard Uthwat and Martha his wife and all others born out of the dominion between 1689-90, Feb. 13 and 1698-9, Feb. 25 whose fathers and mothers were natural born subjects and were then actually in the service of the king or queen should be naturalized. Such persons were within 5 years of obtaining the age of 14 to take the Sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England and the oaths as by the Act of 1 Wm. and Mary, c 8 and to make proof of birth and condition as above. Proof and record hereof was to be made in the Courts as in the Act of Charles II. just quoted.

The subsequent legislation of William's reign has a purely legal import. The Act of 11 Wm. III., c 6 (as to which see Hist. MSS. Reports, House of Lords MSS. III., 356) to enable natural born subjects to inherit ancestors' estates either lineal or collateral notwithstanding their father or mother were aliens had subsequently to be amended (by 25 Geo. II., c 39) on account of doubts and inconveniences arising by reason of its retrospective action. By the latter Act therefore it was restricted to persons legally capable of inheriting as next heir any particular estate in question and if such heir were a female and daughter of an alien but herself having a son born within the dominion then the female shall be divested in favour of such son in like manner as is allowed by the Common Law of England in cases of birth of a nearer heir.

The Act of 12 and 13 Wm. III., c 2 (the Act of Succession) provided in clause 3 that no person born out of England, Scotland or Ireland although naturalized or made a denizen shall be capable of being of the Privy Council, of parliament or of holding office of trust under the Crown or of having grants of land under the Crown. This Act, which was directed against William's Dutch followers, was practically re-enacted by 1 Geo. I., stat. 2, c 4 (being this time directed against the Hanoverian followers of George) and it was thereby prescribed that for the future in order to preserve the clause inviolate it was to be inserted in all bills of naturalization,

The reign of Anne gave birth to legislation of more general and permanent value than this just noticed. Passing by the Act of 3 and 4 Anne, c 6 which declared the Scotch to be aliens as from 25 Dec., 1705 (for this Act was merely a move in the diplomatic battle over the Union and was soon after repealed by 4 Anne, c 3) we reach the important Act of 7 Anne, c 5 "for naturalizing foreign Protestants" an Act which is of prime interest both for the purpose of the present work and for the legislative history of English Naturalization law. Its purpose was of course to make generous provision for the flood of Huguenot refugees but the preamble announces at last that the English parliament had been converted to that policy of liberality in the practice of which the English kings, in their patent grants, and the Irish parliament in their legislation, had preceded the English Houses by generations. "The increase of people" says this preamble "is a means of advancing the wealth and strength of a nation." The tardiness of the recognition of such an elementary principle of statecraft by the English parliament is only one among many abounding instances of the insular narrowness which is enshrined in the history of the English House of Commons.

The importance of this Act is twofold. In the first place it provided a simpler mechanism for naturalizing the refugees. They were declared natives on taking the oaths and signing the declaration (as set out in the Act of 6 Anne, c 78) in the Courts of England or Scotland or in Quarter Sessions and on producing proof that they had within three months before the swearing of such oaths taken the Sacrament in some Protestant or reformed congregation within the kingdom. By the last clause of the Act persons qualifying themselves in Ireland in a similar way were declared natural born subjects of the kingdom of Ireland.

This first provision of the Act remained in force for little over two years. It was repealed by 10 Anne, c 9. But in the short time it remained operative very great numbers of refugees were, as will be seen from the lists, naturalized under its conditions, and it is to be borne in mind that the lists referred to, which will appear in Vol. II. of the present work, give only the names of such persons as took the oaths in the High Courts in London, and similarly in Ireland. For the names of those who took the oaths in the country at the various Quarter Sessions (and there must have been at least a certain number of such) are not at present recoverable in view of the inaccessibility or not unfrequently the disorder of Quarter Session Records. It is centuries since Lambard in his Eirenarcha castigated the Clerks of the Peace for their disregard of these records.

In the second place this Act of 7 Anne c 5, enunciated a new principle in English naturalization law. Paragraph 3 enacts as follows: "and be it further enacted that the children of all natural born subjects born out of the allegiance of her Majesty, her heirs and successors shall be deemed, adjudged and taken to be natural born subjects of this kingdom." When this Act of 7 Anne was repealed by that of 10 Anne, c 9 as already stated, this latter clause was left unrepealed. How novel a principle this was in English law will be apparent when it is pointed out that in the present volume there are numerous cases in the seventeenth century of the naturalizing of children born to ambassadors when abroad in the king's service, and further that the attempt which was made in 1610 to pass a bill for naturalizing ambassadors' children proved a failure (see Commons Journals vol I, pp. 421, 422.) Although thus legally revolutionary, this is new principle was if anything made even stronger or, if the phrase be preferred, more elastic by the Act of 4 Geo. II., c 21 (1731). This latter Act which had the purpose of explaining doubts as to the construction of the clause in question enacted that all children born out of allegiance whose fathers were or shall be natural born subjects shall themselves be taken to be natural born subjects provided that such fathers be not attainted or in the service of the king's enemy. The difference between these two Acts is that whilst that of Anne required both father and mother to be natural born subjects that of Geo. II. only required the father to be so.

The importance of this enactment lies not so much in the fact that it is absolutely opposed to all mediæval conceptions of allegiance as that it brought into existence a new class of international status—persons of double nationality: and the enormous complexity and difficulty which has thereby been introduced into the domain of international law can only be fully appreciated by those who have turned over the modern treaties between some of the states of the modern world on this question of naturalization.

By the later Act of 13 Geo. III., c 21 (1773) this novel principle was not only again affirmed but again extended in its scope being hereby made applicable to the children of the children affected by the prior Act of 4 Geo. II., c 21, but with a proviso that in order to enjoy natives' [Customs] duties the persons hereby naturalized must take the oath and declaration as in 1 Geo. I. and the Sacrament in the way already described above.

No other English legislation of the rest of the eighteenth century has the importance of the Acts just noticed. Whilst unimportant from point of view of principle the remaining Acts show one and all the same tendency. For the purpose of some temporary need or condition (of war or trade) they all carry still further the process of relaxing the old mediæval restrictions on naturalization. It is merely necessary to enumerate them briefly.

13 Geo. II., c 3 for the better supply of mariners and seamen for his Majesty's ships of war, merchant or trading ships or privateers. This Act provides that during the present war and no longer every foreigner so serving for two years from 1739, Jan. 1 during the time of this war shall be taken for natural born subjects provided that persons so naturalized shall not be thereby enabled to be of the Privy Council, etc. In the case of future wars the king can revive this Act by proclamation.

22 Geo. II., c 45. Act for encouraging the whale fishery. This Act provides that every foreigner serving for three years on any whale ship fitted out in accordance with the Act of 6 Geo. II., c 33 and who shall take the oaths and declaration as by 1 Geo. I., c 13 shall be deemed naturalized. Such oaths were to be subscribed in the High Courts in England or Scotland or at some General Quarter Sessions and the Sacrament was to be taken three months before. The benefit hereof to be lost if such person go out of the dominions of Great Britain Ireland or the Plantations for more than 12 months at any one time.

9 Anne, c 15 (the South Sea Company Act) § 57. Persons born on board any ship employed in said trade or in any place belonging to said Company are to be natural born subjects.

20 Geo. III., c 20. Act for the better supply of mariners and seamen to serve in his Majesty's ships of war and on board merchant ships, etc. Provides that the Act of 13 Geo. II., c 3 shall be deemed to be in full force as for the last war and the present hostilities and that any person who has served since 1777, Mar. 25 for two years in any such ships shall have rights as in the said Act.

If nineteenth century legislation on this subject of allegiance has taken on a different guise it is not so much due to a change of spirit in the legislature as to the change in the juristic status of the subject of naturalization itself. The body of treaty law between different nations on this subject has now grown to such proportions that the subject itself may be said to have been moved from the domain of domestic law to that of international law. And this change is expressed in the law itself by the ever increasing sense of international comity which it breathes. In England this movement begins comparatively early and consistently takes the form of benevolent attempts at lightening the disabilities of naturalized aliens and at simplifying and cheapening the forms of admission.

On the 15th Mar., 1843 a select Committee was appointed to inquire into the state of the laws affecting aliens. The Committee reported in June of the same year (see its report in blue book House of Commons, 1843, No. 307) and upon this report is based the Act of 7 and 8 Vict., c 66 passed 6 Aug., 1844. After repealing previous legislation of an inconsistent nature with the intention of the present Act this Act provides that every person born out of the dominion of a mother who is a natural born subject shall be capable of taking estate real or personal. Aliens of a friendly state may take personal property except chattels real. Aliens of a friendly state may take lands for purpose of residence for term not exceeding 21 years.

As to the form of naturalization the Act provides that every alien residing in Great Britain with intent to settle shall present a memorial to the Secretary of state stating age, trade and duration of residence. Thereupon the Secretary is to issue a certificate granting him the rights of a natural born subject except the right of being of the Privy Council or Parliament. Thereupon the oath of Allegiance and to the Act of Succession is to be taken. Finally the Act provides that any women married to a natural born subject or naturalized person shall be deemed to be herself naturalized.

Here the matter legislatively rested for some years but in 1868 it was again taken up. In May of that year a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the legal condition of natural born subjects of this realm residing in foreign countries and how, having regard to the laws and practice of other States it may be expedient to alter the laws relating to such natural born subjects, their wives, descendents and relatives: and secondly to enquire into the legal condition of naturalized aliens in the realm and how far it may be expedient to alter the laws relating to them, having regard once more to the laws and practice of Foreign States. The report of this Commission was issued in 1869 as a blue book and is a valuable compendium of British, Colonial and Foreign law on this subject. It is at the same time a speaking proof of how far at last the subject had entered into the domain of International law and how vastly its complexity had been increased thereby, owing mainly to the phenomenon of persons of double nationality.

The Act of 33 and 34 Vict., c 14 (passed 12 May, 1870) is based upon the findings of this Commission. It is entitled an Act to amend the laws relating to the legal condition of aliens and British subjects and is briefly referred to generally as the Naturalization Act, 1870.

It provides that real and personal property of every description may be taken held and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural born subject but this not to qualify an alien for office or for municipal or parliamentary franchise.

§ 3. On a convention with a foreign State to that effect naturalized persons are allowed to divest themselves of their naturalization by a declaration of alienage.

§ 4. On the other hand a similar right is given to British subjects of a double nationality. Any person who by reason of being born within the dominion is a natural born subject of the Queen but who also at the time of his birth became under the law of any foreign State a subject of such state and likewise any person born out of the Queen's dominions but of a British born father may if of full age make a declaration of alienage and thereafter shall cease to be a British subject.

§ 6. Any British subject naturalized in a foreign State shall cease to be a British subject unless he make a declaration of British nationality, whereupon and on taking the oath of allegiance he shall be deemed to be and to have continually been a British subject with this qualification that he shall not when within the limits of the foreign State within which he has been naturalized be deemed to be a British subject unless he has ceased to be a subject of that state in pursuance of the laws thereof or in pursuance of a treaty to that effect.

§ 7. After 5 years of residence an alien intending to reside may apply for a certificate of naturalization which the Secretary of State may give or withhold at discretion and without appeal. An alien so certificated shall have all political and other privileges with this qualification that he shall not when within the foreign State of which he was a subject previously be deemed to be a British subject unless he has ceased to be a subject of that state in pursuance of the laws thereof or of a treaty to that effect.

As to the national status of married women and children the Act provides as follows: § 10. (1) a married women is the subject of the State of her husband. (3) The children of a British father or mother who has become an alien shall if during infancy resident in the country in which such father or mother has been naturalized and who in accordance with the laws of such state have become themselves naturalized there shall be subjects of that state and not British subjects but if such parent obtain a certificate of resumption of British nationality such children shall if resident be deemed to have resumed the position of a British subject. (5) E converso for aliens' children in England when such aliens become naturalized. Every child of such parent if resident in England during infancy with such parent shall be a British subject.

§ 13. Nothing in this Act shall affect the grant of letters of denization by the King or Queen.

§ 14. Nothing in this Act shall qualify an alien to be the owner of a British ship.

§ 15. Within their limits the colonies are to have power to legislate as to naturalization.

Practically this Act is the last English legislation of wide or general importance on the subject; for the Act of 33 and 34 Vict., c 102 merely provides an amendment to the Secretary of State's power of making regulations and the Act of 35 and 36 Vict., c 39 relates only to a supplementary convention with the United States of date 23 Feb., 1871 concerning the renunciation of nationality; whilst finally the Act of 58 and 59 Vict., c 43 bears only on the question of the effect of the naturalization of the parent on the status of children.

From such a survey of the English legislation on this subject there may be drawn two general conclusions. (1) The chaotic state of the law is simply due to the lack of a guiding juridical principle. The simple severity of the mediæval maxim that allegiance is co-terminous with dominion and that nationality is decided by birth would never have tolerated the phenomenon of a person of double nationality owing double allegiance, and as the empire grew this maxim, if unhampered, would have automatically covered every part of that empire with one homogeneous law. As it is it will be seen from the succeeding pages of this introduction that the English law of this subject has become one thing, colonial law has become another and Irish law was until the Union still another. All this confusion has arisen simply from lack of juristic principle and of ordinary legislative foresight in the framing each successive new law on the subject. So long as naturalization law is regarded as domestic law the mediæval principle is a safe and simple one for each and every sovereign state. And it ought to be superceded as a principle when and only when as the result of a convention among the chief sovereign states of the modern world naturalization law should be formally taken up into the international domain and a fresh principle elaborated and enunciated by common consent.

(2) Throughout English statute law there is no foundation whatever for the portentous fungous growth of English law of domicile.

Not only does the word itself never occur in the English statutes (until the Act of 24 and 25 Vict., c 121 which merely gives the executive the power to determine as to domicile under a convention with a foreign state) but also the very idea itself is totally foreign to English statute and English Common law. Neither of those laws knew of a half way house between native and alien or would ever have tolerated the idea of a mere resident entering the circle of English legal rights without on the one hand an oath of allegiance from him and on the other without a specific grant from the State.

The whole of the structure of Domicile law is simply case law resting upon the Civil law as its basis. Because the statute law has been dumb the mere lawyer has had it all his own way and he has dowered the world with a structure of most malignant import. If international convention resulting in internationally accepted law on this subject cannot reduce to order the chaos—the costs making chaos of the law of domicile—then the sooner international law so called is wiped out of the circle of human sciences the better.

The whole structure of domicile law is needless as the domain it covers can be fitly provided for without the introduction of the idea of domicile at all. Roughly speaking that domain covers three great groups of legal phenomena. (1) Testate or intestate succession to moveables. (2) The status of wives or widows of strangers. (3) The status of the infants of such marriages.

The first of these can be provided for by a geographical principle, viz. that property shall pass in accordance with the law of the realm within which it is situate at the time of the death of the individual in question regardless entirely of the question of the domicile of such person. In the second and third cases all requirements can be met by the principle of territoriality or of nationality and allegiance (international provision being first made for the abolition of the modern nonsensical idea of double nationality and double allegiance) and in addition it can meet those requirements with certainty and clearness whereas the principle of domicile meets them if at all only with the greatest uncertainty, confusion and arbitrariness. For of a truth domicile of itself is literally an unprovable proposition. It is evidenced partly by a fact (residence) and partly by a state of mind (animus manendi, the intention to remain). What court of any land could ever prove a state of mind or an intention? As the Puritans of the days of Laud said concerning the 'etcetera oath' who shall ever fathom the bottomless perjury of an intention?

It ought to be the easiest thing in the world (if there were no lawyers in the various legislatures) for the European and American governments to agree internationally to banish the word domicile for ever from their legal systems.

IRISH NATURALIZATION LAW.

At the outset it may be premised as a matter of general principle that the English settlement in Ireland is in its legal aspect simply a portion of England itself and that the Irish (except those de quinque sanguinibus and such individual Irish as were endenized) stand completely outside the circle of rights enjoyed by the mediæval English settler. These two aspects of the question have to be kept sharply distinct until the reign of James I.

As to the English settlers in Ireland their equality in matter of legal rights with the English in England is nakedly asserted almost from the first. In the reign of Henry III. the Statutum Hiberniæ de co-heredibus (20 Hen. III.) prescribes the English law to be used in Ireland in questions of homage from and wardship of daughters inheriting lands of knights of the parts of Ireland. The Ordinatio pro statu terræ Hiberniæ (31 Edw. III., stat. 4) is equally explicit. § xviii. "Although as well those born in Ireland of English lineage as those born in England and living in Ireland be true English and under our dominion and use the same laws, yet dissensions arise by reason of birth between them that are natives of Ireland and them that are natives of England" it therefore prescribes that such dissensions be punished. The Statute of Kilkenny (40 Edw. III., Statute Rolls of Ireland, vol I., p. 437) after prescribing the Common Law to be used by the English and not the Brehon or the March Law adds "and that no difference of allegiance henceforth be made between the English born in Ireland and the English born in England by calling them English hobbe or Irish dog but that all be called by one name the English lieges of our lord the king."

The following extract shows that whilst this construction of the law was insisted on by the Executive in England there was a tendency to call it in question. "To the collectors of the petty custom in London. Order upon petition of the merchants of Dublin for the king's collectors to stay their demand upon said merchants for payment of a custom of 3d. in the pound . . . as the said merchants have shewn the king that although they and all other merchants of Ireland are of his own dominion and have hitherto been reckoned as natives, the collectors are demanding 3d. in the pound . . . as of aliens, pretending that they are aliens, wherefore they have prayed for remedy; and the king reckons the merchants of Dublin as natives. Proviso that they pay the subsidy of 6d. in the pound lately granted to the king" (1372, Sept. 26, close Roll, 46 Edw. III., m. 9).

Similarly in 1421 the Commons of the Irish Parliament complained that whereas up to that time the English lieges born in Ireland had been received at the Inns of Courts in England from the conquest of Ireland until lately they were now denied admission and it was therefore desired that this be remedied by the king "that your laws may be perpetuated and not forgotten in your said land [of Ireland]." In spite of such tendancies however it must be taken as proven that up to the time of the Stuarts there was no distinction of allegiance between English in England and English in Ireland.

In the seventeenth century (to digress for a moment) when the case of the Post nati was argued in a conference between the two English Houses in the Painted Chamber (25 Feb., 1606-7) the English Common Law lawyers, hostile as a body to the wholesale naturalizing of the Scotch as a mere consequence of James the first's accession to the English throne, argued that allegiance was tied to the laws and not to the king's person and they instanced the cases of what they called subordinate kingdoms such as Ireland, Gascony and Aquitaine. Such a reference to the case of Ireland would have been impossible in the middle ages. In the statute law of England there is no foundation for this view and the comparison of the case of Ireland with that of the English possessions in France is misleading partly because of the question of the French king's suzerainty but mainly because the identity of the English king's prerogative in Ireland and in England is accepted throughout both explicitly (see 17 Edw. II., c 15 and 10 Hy. VII., c 7) and implicitly in all English and Irish legislation. Furthermore when the legal distinction between the English in Ireland and the native Irish was finally obliterated by James I. it was specifically proclaimed, as will be seen in a moment, that there was no difference of allegiance.

As to the exclusion of the native Irish from the circle of rights enjoyed by the English in Ireland, it is to be taken as the Common law and acted upon without question from the earliest times. Where exceptions are made such exceptions take the form of grants from the king in England by letters patent to this or that individual to use or have the benefit of English laws in Ireland.

The following instances and extracts are illustrative hereof :

1263, June 26. According to custom hitherto prevailing in Ireland persons outlawed in England were not held as outlawed in Ireland. Gregory le Somenur having by reason of an outlawry in England been arrested in Ireland and taken to England and there imprisoned, the king is unwilling that any prejudice should in future accrue therefrom to his Irish subjects. (Patent Roll, 47 Hy. III., No. 77, m. 8. Patent Roll, 47-9 Hy. III., No. 78, m. 25. 'Calendar of documents relating to Ireland,' 1252-84, p. 119).

The Irish had humbly prayed the king that he would of his grace grant to them that they might use and enjoy in Ireland the same laws and customs as the English and that they might in future be governed by those laws and customs. The king being unwilling to comply without the consent of the archbishops, &c., commands them to meet on days to be appointed to debate whether the king can grant this concession without prejudice to them and to lay the result before the king before the [meeting of] the next parliament at Westminster. 1299, (27 Edw. I.) Assize of novel disseisin.

William son of David and Jordan le Palmer disseised Walter Olothel of his freehold in Tancardeston.

William and John come and say that they ought not to answer because Walter is Hibernicus and not of such blood as that they ought to answer and this they offer to prove.

Walter says that William le Mareschal, earl of Pembroke, was sometime Lord of all Leinster and he in the 10th year of king John by his charter enfranchised [? made servus into generosus or made Irish into English] one Gillepatrick Olothel (great grandfather of Walter whose heir he is) and his heirs and granted to them that they might use English laws. And he says that Gillepatrick and his heirs ever after used that liberty. He says also that he, his father, and his grandfather were in juries and assises as well in Courts of the king as in those of liberties and this he offers to prove and he prays judgment thereupon. He proffers also the said charter which testifies the enfranchisement.

A day is given to them. (Ibid., p. 271).

The first legislative provision relating to Irish disability appears to be the already quoted Ordinatio of 31 Edw. III. Section VIII. of this enactment forbad marriage between English and Irish. The distinctively Irish Statutes carried this further especially 40 Edw. III., cc. 2, 3, 4, 10 (Statute of Kilkenny). The Act of 25 Hy. VI, c 4 (Irish Statutes at Large, vol. I., p. 7) laid down that he who will be taken for an Englishman shall not use a beard upon his upper lip alone. The offender herein shall be taken for an Irish enemy. The Act of 28 Hy. VIII., c 15 (ibid., p. 119) prescribed the English order, habit and language and the further Act of the same year, c 28 (ibid., p. 171) forbad marrying and fostering with Irishmen. This latter Act was still further strengthened by that of 11 Eliz., Sess. I., c 6 (ibid., vol. I., p. 359) which forbad any Irish lord or captain of the Irishrie of Ireland to foster to any of the lords, (earl, viscount, etc.) of the same realm of Ireland.

The relaxation of this sharp distinction between English and Irish which was attempted by 5 Edw. IV. was only partial as it applied only to those counties of the English Pale where the Irish were considered to be more civilized. (5 Edw. IV., c 3, ibid., vol. I., p. 29. An Act that Irishmen in the counties of Dublin, Meath, Uriel and Kildare go apparelled like English and wear beards after the English manner, swear allegiance and take English surnames).

The final abolition of the distinction between native Irish and English Irish came only in the 17th century. Although the Act of 11, 12 and 13 James I., c 5 (ibid., p. 441) only enumerates a portion of the above repressive legislation there can be no doubt that its intention was to repeal it all for it expressly lays down that henceforth all (native Irish as well as English born in Ireland) are subjects of the king and under his protection. What it did not repeal was subsequently repealed by the Act of 10 and 11 Car. I., c 6 (ibid., vol. II., p. 153) the preamble of which recites the happy change of the times and proclaims the purpose of abolishing distinction between the subjects of the king.

From the date of this latter Act therefore we may consider theoretically that allegiance in Ireland embraces every inhabitant and that it is indistinguishable from allegiance in England. But if it is assumed from this that henceforth there is only one source (viz. the king in England or the parliament in England) from which naturalization or denization was obtainable such assumption would be wrong.

It is clear that from the first the Irish executive had assumed and exercised the sovereign right of admitting the alien to citizen rights by patent and in a similar way the Irish parliament claimed to share in the exercise of this right just as the English parliament did in England. This latter feature is evident from the Act of 25 Hy. VI., c 5 (that if an Irish enemy received to the king's allegiance shall be found afterwards to rob he shall be treated as a non-liege-man). And nine years later we have an instance of an Irish Act granting denization to a pure foreigner : 34 Hy. VI., c 22 (Statute Rolls of Ireland, vol. II., p. 387). "Also at the request of the Commons that whereas Arnald Malename and Pownsett de Sowle merchants of London and resident in Bordeaux have renounced their friends their goods and their possessions because they would not offend the obedience of our sovereign lord the king but to prove themselves his faithful liegemen; whereupon the premises considered it is ordained and agreed by authority of the said parliament that the said Arnald and Pownsett be made denizens to pay their Customs to our sovereign lord as Englishmen born in England and Ireland are wont to pay; to continue for six years provided that they dwell in England or in Ireland."

It will be noticed that in this case the form and procedure are different from those followed in England. It is a temporary grant of denization merely yet it is granted by Act of parliament. Another grant of a fuller type but made in the same way occurs in the same year :

"Also at the prayer of Jenico Markes, native of Gascony, citizen and merchant of Dublin, that whereas the said Jenico when he was of the age of 8 years came into this land and in the same city made his residence and was apprentice with John Bennet of the said city by which apprenticeship he was made free and took his oath, as is in the Tholsel of record, and being so free, has married here and purposes always to reside here. Whereupon, the premises considered, it is ordained by authority of the said parliament that the said Jenico may enjoy, in purchasing to him and his issue born in Ireland all lawful possessions with all manner of merchandises, buying and selling and that the said Jenico shall pay to the king custom as the denizens of England and of the said city do and have used to do without any hindrance of our sovereign lord the king or any of his officers." (Statute Rolls of Ireland II., pp. 399-40, 34 Hy. VI., § XXVI.)

As to the former feature of denization grants there can be no doubt that the right of granting denization by patent was held to reside in the Lord Lieutenant and Council as exercising the full kingly prerogative in Ireland. One instance has been already given supra p. xx. There is another instance in the Carew Papers (Cal. vol. II., p. 427) in the form of an entry of the indenture between the Lord General (Sir John Perrott) and Sorley McDonnell. Sorley prays for pardon for rebellion and to be made a free denizen. Thereupon the Lord deputy and Council grant him free pardon and protection and letters patent of denization. Furthermore in the present volume will be found ample proof that from the time of James I. at least the English forms and procedure (denization by patent and naturalization by Act of Parliament) were with certain variations of detail fairly faithfully reproduced in Ireland.

It might be presumed therefore that from this point onwards there is no distinction between denization patents and naturalization Acts in England and Ireland respectively and that we are henceforth dealing only with a single institution operating from two points London and Dublin and conferring identical rights. Surprising as it may seem this is by no means the case.

In the first place it is doubtful whether the purely English legislation on this subject after 1600 was operative in Ireland at all or not. Irishmen certainly hold that it was not though as has been seen above p. xi., the Act of 7 Anne, c 5 specifically legislates for Ireland. Whether this be so or not it is quite certain that from the time of the Act of 10 Car. I., c 4 (see infra) Ireland had a body of legislation of its own on this subject and it cannot for a moment be held that this purely Irish legislation applied to England. It must be regarded as private to Ireland. For instance after the accession of James I. to the English throne the English legislature obstinately refused to naturalize the ante-nati Scotch. But the Irish Act of 10 Car. I., c 4 did what the English parliament refused to do. (Statutes at Large Ireland vol. II., p. 100 Act for naturalizing of all the Scottish nation which were ante-nati. All Scotch persons are hereby adjudged natural subjects of Ireland with all priviledges). Similarly the Act of 14 and 15 Car. II., c 113 (for encouraging Protestant strangers to inhabit Ireland ibid., vol. II., p. 498) is specifically restricted in its application to Ireland. For the purpose of the present volume this Act is of special importance. In brief it naturalizes every foreign trader and artificer who shall come to Ireland with intention to inhabit and who shall take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy before the Lord Chancellor, or the Lord President or Vice-presidents of the Province of Munster or Connaught or any judge in circuit who are to certify same into the High Court of Chancery there to remain on record. This naturalization is specifically stated to be "within this your Majesty's kingdom" meaning Ireland, although curiously enough the clause giving them the right of purchasing and inheriting lands does not say where such lands are to be. But there can be no doubt whatever that it is implied that the lands are to be in Ireland. Having thus provided for naturalizations the Act goes on to provide as follows:

"Both Protestant strangers and aliens and his Majesty's subjects, being traders, artisans, artificers, seamen or otherwise skilled in any mystery, craft or trade, coming into any city, borough and incorporated town or place of this kingdom (Ireland) to settle shall on paying 20s. to the magistrate thereof be admitted freeman of such city town or corporation and if he desire it of all and any guild, brotherhood, society or fellowship of any trade and during his residence and no longer shall enjoy all privileges and immunities of trading, buying, working and selling as amply as any freeman of the said city, etc. and that every such person or persons whatsoever who shall be admitted to be free as aforesaid shall from henceforth be deemed, esteemed and taken and be denizen and denizens within this kingdom (Ireland) he first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy and the usual oaths of freemen and bearing like charges as freemen."

It is quite clear that the purpose of this clause here abstracted at length is to give the persons naturalized the additional right of admission to the town guilds but the noticeable point is that it specifies the king's subjects as well as foreigners; and as Scotchmen were already all naturalized these words can only refer to Englishmen. Clearly therefore in the minds of the Irish legislature Englishmen were aliens in Ireland. If proof were required of this inference it is contained in the present volume for on pp. 338-346 infra there are recorded the names of 145 Englishmen, from all parts of England, 1 native of Jersey and 1 native of the Isle of Man who became natives of Ireland under this Act.

It may be as well to complete in one view the story of later Irish legislation on this subject for it will be found that not only is it confined in its application to the kingdom of Ireland but also that it proceeds on quite different principles from those followed by the English legislature.

As the Act of 14 and 15 Car. II., c 13 had continuance for only 7 years it was revived for a further period of 7 years by the Act of 4 Wm. and Mary, c 2 (Irish Statutes at Large, vol. III, p. 243) and again for another 5 years by the Act 2 Anne, c 14 (ibid., vol. IV., p. 48) and was finally made perpetual by the Act of 4 Geo. I., c 9 (ibid., p. 459). It is in connection with the first of these revivals (that of 4 Wm. and Mary) that the names printed pp. 347-56 in the present volume are recorded. At this point the legislative history of the subject pauses until the reign of Geo. III. The Act of 19 and 20 Geo. III., c 29 (Irish Statutes at Large, vol. XI., p. 607) prescribes that all foreign merchants, traders, artificers, etc., transporting themselves to settle in Ireland shall on taking the oath set out in full in the Act be deemed free and natural subjects of this kingdom [of Ireland] in every respect. The oath is to be administered by the chief magistrate of any city or town corporate who is to certify same into the Court of Chancery there to remain of record. But such person is not to be qualified to be of the Parliament or the Privy Council or to hold office of trust under the Crown.

The Act of 23 and 24 Geo. III., c 29 (ibid., vol. XII., p. 692) which is intended to extend the provisions of the Act just quoted made very little difference save that it defines the persons intended as "all foreigners of any sect (except Jews) coming to abide and settle." The procedure and proviso remain the same.

The Act of 23 and 24 Geo. III., c 51 (ibid., p. 775) for vesting in the king certain lands in Knockroe, Co. Waterford provides for the settlement there of citizens of Geneva or other foreign Protestants and for their naturalization after incorporation and on taking the oaths.

The last Act bearing on this subject before the Union, that of 36 Geo. III., c 48 (ibid., vol. XVII., p. 1124), has for its purpose simply to explain the already quoted Act of 19 and 20 Geo. III., c 29. There are persons ready to buy lands in Ireland and to settle there provided they can be naturalized. To remove the doubt which has arisen it is therefore provided that all foreigners whether they be merchants, tradesmen, seamen or farmers, or not, shall on settling in Ireland and taking the oath and affirmation be deemed free natural subjects. But such person must first obtain licence of naturalization from the Chief Governor in Council to be produced to the magistrate before administration of the oath and this licence must be filed with the magistrate's certificate in Chancery.

The mere recital of this body of legislation proves conclusively that in the matter of naturalization and denization Ireland did from the reign of Charles I. consider herself a different kingdom from England and that she employed her own machinery and did not hesitate to set up a different principle for admission to allegiance. This rather startling conclusion is rendered still more striking when we turn to the operative details as evidenced in the present volume.

Firstly with regard to the denizations of Scotchmen in Ireland between 1603 and 1634-5, it will be noticed that in the present volume there are two parallel series of names : (a) pp. 1-20, Scotchmen made denizens in England and at the same time made capable of inheriting and holding lands in Ireland : the intention being that they should become undertakers of the Ulster Plantation. (b) pp. 319 seq. Scotchmen made denizens in Ireland whether for the same specific purpose of the Ulster Plantation or for the more general purpose of settling anywhere.

We can only hazard a guess as to why there should be this curious duplication of machinery and process. At its outset the Ulster Plantation was promoted by the English government and its initial stages were worked from London. The main body of the first undertakers therefore would be dealt with in London, would come to London for their grants (it will be noticed how the denization entries on pp. 1-20 contain as well specific grants of lands) and would probably go to Ireland via London. No theoretical difficulty would arise as to the efficacy in Ireland of an English denization grant for in 1608 there had not yet arisen the conception of a separate Irish nationality or allegiance. This conception emerged in the latter half of the 17th century and only became stereotyped in the 18th century by legislative recognition. In 1608 therefore a Scotchman or a foreigner obtaining denization in England would on passing into Ireland be accepted there as equally and ipso facto a denizen in Ireland. But when once the Plantation had been fairly set on foot the tendency would be to take the short cut, to go direct to Ireland and to work the arrangements from Dublin. From that moment it became more convenient to throw on to the Irish executive the work of granting patents of denization. (For proof of this general position see Calendar of State Papers, Ireland, 1616-25, pp. 85, 392, 393, 567, 594, ibid., 1625, pp. 220, 350 ; Calendar of State Papers Domestic, James I., vol. IV., p. 154).

But none the less and when all this is said it still remains an inevitable conclusion that the two series of grants carried with them or conveyed very different rights and privileges. The first series, those granted in England, made a man a denizen of England and Ireland the second series made a man a denizen of Ireland only. If this conclusion were not true then it would follow that all Scotsmen being naturalized in Ireland by the Irish Act of 10 Car. I., c 4 were thereby naturalized in England. But on p. 59 of the present volume will be found instances of Scotsmen made denizens in England after the date of this Irish Act of 10 Car. I. In the reign of James I. therefore we can only conclude that a foreigner naturalized in England was thereby accepted as naturalized in Ireland also but that a foreigner naturalized in Ireland remained a foreigner in England. By the time of Charles II. the conception of Ireland as a completely organized and legally separate kingdom had so far progressed that this discrepancy of privilege was abolished. In fine the result achieved was the recognition, at first tacit and then explicit by legislative enactment, of the principle that if a naturalized Irishman was not an Englishman then neither should a naturalized Englishman be an Irishman, or to put it more simply still, if an Irishman was not an Englishman then neither should an Englishman be an Irishman. The naked proof of this proposition has been already given supra, pp. xxii-xxiii in the treatment of the Irish Act of 14-15 Car. II.

And outside the legislative domain there are other considerations of a more general but equally vital nature. The Irish form of denization is quite different from the English. "Free from all yoke of service Brabant, Irish, or otherwise" "of free state and condition and from all yoke of servitude Scotch, Irish or otherwise quit and free," are phrases which breathe an atmosphere quite different from that of an English patent of denization or of an English naturalization Act. And then again there is the all important question of trade and of privileges under the Navigation Acts. When Ireland was excluded from the benefit of these latter Acts it would have defeated the (malign) purpose of the English legislature if there had been held to have been no difference between Irish allegiance and English allegiance and if a man naturalized in Ireland were thereby naturalized in England, for such a dictum would have entitled all Irishmen and all foreigners naturalized there to the benefits of the Navigation Acts. Such a proposition would not have been tolerated for a moment by the English Customs officials or by the English executive.

Indeed it would seem as if the operative principle which was at work and which accomplished the legislative revolution whereby 17th century overthrew the mediæval principle of a single allegiance and a single nationality for both England and Ireland was this one motive of trade jealousy. Up to the time of the Navigation Acts the conception of England and Ireland as separate and mutually exclusive kingdoms (in this matter of naturalization law) had been evidenced in only one Act, that of 10 Car. II. This Act marks the first appearance of a totally novel principle in English and Irish relationship and the malign innovation was consecrated and perpetuated by the Navigation Acts. (There are of course previous proofs of trade jealousy between the two countries. The present argument is that this trade jealousy had not hitherto invaded the domain of naturalization law). In the Treasury Records (Customs Book, vol. IV., p. 6, under date 23 Jan., 1677-8) there is the following illuminating instance which shows at once how recent was the growth of this idea of separation between England and Ireland and at the same time what the motive principle of it was. Other instances such as the Acts against the importation of Irish cattle, etc. will occur of themselves to the reader.

Warrant from the Lord Treasurer Danby to the Customs Commissioners to discharge William Christian, collector of Whitehaven port of the surcharge of £35 17s. 0d. wherewith he stands charged for having suffered Geo. Stafford a man of Scotch parents but an inhabitant of Ireland to enter at two several times 107 barrels of herrings for which he paid only (the [Book of Rates] duty of) 5d. a barrel as an Irishman but by reason he was not so named in the Customs entries said Christian is charged with 3s. for every barrel, the Act [of 1662] for encouragement of trade having provided a custom of £1 16s. 0s. per cwt. for white herrings imported to England in any foreign vessel.

In excuse of his act Christian pleads that the surveyor of Whitehaven having formerly desired to be informed generally whether Scotch were to be reputed denizens or aliens the Customs Commissioners by letter informed him that the

INTRODUCTION.

Scotch not being in construction of law understood aliens are to enter as natives and to pay only English customs; which general direction being according to the Act of Tunnage and Poundage the petitioner Christian misapplied it in this particular case not taking notice of the said imposition settled by said Act of Trade: from all which it appears that his omission herein was a mistake and without any intention of fraud to his Majesty.

Finally there is the inevitable and all important question of the holding of lands in England. If an English Common Law lawyer of the seventeenth century had been asked the question "Can a foreigner who is naturalized in Ireland acquire the right to hold, inherit and transmit lands in England" he would have been staggered. Indeed I can imagine him fainting at the audacity of it.

The only conclusion therefore to which I can come is that the grand unifying and simple maxim of the mediæval jurist (that allegiance is co-terminous with dominion) was operative in Ireland up to the Act of 10 Car. I.; that henceforth it was superceded insensibly by a conception of Ireland as a separate kingdom with a separate nationality and with a (legislatively) more and more differentiated type of allegiance; and that the operating impulse in this revolution proceeded from England as much as from Ireland and was finally accentuated and perpetuated by trade jealousy.

The doctrine of allegiance as co-terminous with dominion would imply as a consequence that English settlers in English Plantations and Colonies and their decedents born there were of necessity natural born Englishmen. That this result does not appear as nakedly stated and acted upon resulted probably from the fact that the Plantations attracted other settlers besides English. There might be anti-nati Scotch, native or pure Irish, Anglo Irish or lastly confessed foreigners such as French, Dutch, etc.

That difficulties arose there can be no doubt although we catch few echoes of them in the English records. The natural tendency would be to posit all English as English and thereafter to accept as English all planters if born in the Plantation of settler parents and again thereafter to make such provision for denization as was made by the law of the mother country. And conversely there must have been a tacit assumption of the principle that an Englishman in the Plantation was an Englishman in England. This is the principle which seems to be accepted in the Commonwealth period if we may judge by a motion made in the House of Lords on the 16th of June, 1648 (Lords Journals vol. x., p. 325).

Order brought in for making the Planters that are born in New England free denizens of England.

This order was read twice and committed but no further reference to it occurs.

Secondly. The principle just enunciated that all English in a Plantation were English in England would imply as a corollary that all English in England were English in the Plantations. But there can be no doubt that both sides of this proposition became weakened and dubious as the Plantations grew in self consciousness. The inference to be drawn from the following case is not entirely clear but it would appear to be that an English denizen having become a denizen of the colony of New York was denied English rights.

31 Jan., 1677. Warrant from the Lord Treasurer Danby to the Customs Commissioners to discharge the seizure of the ship James of New York whereof the master is Jacob Mauritts of his Majesty's colony of New York, the said ship being seized by the surveyor of the Navigation Act on its return to England on the ground of its being improperly manned, the master and three mariners being strangers and only 4 of the crew being English which is short of the due proportion as required by the said Act; in reply to which charge the said Mauritts alleged that he was a denizen of this kingdom and produced letters of denization under the Great Seal by which he is obliged to reside with his family in England; and he further made proof that in Feb. last he sailed with his ship from England to New York with nine men, 7 thereof being English, and from New York made a voyage to Barbados with the same company but there 2 English left him and compelled him to pay their wages and after his return to New York another of the English was drowned and when he came from New York more English were not to be had so he came away with 7 men whereof 4 English 2 Dutch and a Dutch boy one of the said Dutch being a denizen and inhabitant of New York: further the said master swore that his wife which is all his family is an inhabitant of New York and that himself has been a denizen of that place 8 years. (Treasury Customs Book iii., p. 284).

From a general knowledge of such warrants of discharge (they are quite numerous) I think that the release granted in this case was simply of favour and due to the extenuating circumstances of the case and that it contains no pronouncement on the question of the master's rights as a denizen. This question seems to me to be merely shirked by the Lord Treasurer.

Thirdly. As the king's representative the Governor of a colony or Plantation either tacitly or by explicit authorisation (in his commission) assumed the royal prerogative of making denizens and similarly the legislature or alternatively the Council of the colony would tend to assume the parliamentary function of granting private Acts of naturalization. But this formal exactness was not copied clear cut and slavishly. In the case of Virginia for instance an Act of Assembly was passed in 1683 empowering the Governor to naturalize inhabitants of that Colony being aliens or foreigners. Similarly in Antigua the Assembly passed an Act in 1702 (No. 11) providing that protestant aliens on taking the oaths (which were to be entered of record in the Secretary's office) and on becoming or being freeholders of at least 10 acres should enjoy all the privileges of a free born citizen.

In what light were such provincial Acts to be regarded by the mother country? The natural conclusion to draw would tend to be that being local in origin they were also local in extent and that the grant (the rights conferred) would not be valid beyond the borders of the particular colony in question. Otherwise the Governor of a Colony might appear to have the power of conferring rights of naturalization in England itself, which was then unthinkable. Some idea of the difficulties which arose as a consequence of these colonial grants may be gathered from the case of Henry Brunet a Frenchman naturalized (sic) by the Governor of Virginia in 1682. In this case the seizure of the said Brunet's ship gave rise to the question as to whether his naturalization should be held ineffectual, that is as not extending to all the foreign colonies. The Lords of Trade referred the question to Chief Justice North in this form "if any alien naturalized in Virginia can lawfully trade in or to any other of the king's dominions" [i.e., in controvention of the Navigation Acts]. On Justice North's opinion to the contrary the Lords of Trade agreed that naturalization in a Colony is only local [and therefore restricted to that Colony alone in the rights conferred]. Upon this decision the seizure of Brunet's ship was upheld. (For the details of this case see Colonial Calendar 1680, pp. 211, 243, 250, 258).

Sooner or later this question of trading rights was bound to raise the larger question as to the legality of these colonial grants. The matter came to a head in 1699. In Sept. of that year the Council of Trade considered the case of a Dr. de la Rouse who had been endenized in Barbados in 1651 in pursuance of the letters patent granted by Charles I. to the Earl of Carlisle for all the Caribbee Islands which was held in this particular case to sufficiently capacitate the recipient. (Acts of the Privy Council Colonial series II., p. 340). In the following month of November the general question of these grants was referred to the Attorney General and their report thereon was read in the Privy Council on the 18th Jan., 1700 (see Hist. MSS. Reports V., p. 228, Acts of the Privy Council Colonial series II., p. 348). This report is abstracted as follows:

By an Act passed in the General Assembly of the Province of Maryland the 10th of June, 1697 Stephen Francis an Italian and George Hacombe a German were naturalized and thereby vested with all the rights and privileges of natural born subjects of that Province. By another Act passed in the same assembly the 31st of March, 1698 one Peter Dondee a Frenchman was in like manner naturalized. But in both the said Acts there is an express proviso that they shall not be construed to enable or qualify the said persons to hold or enjoy any place, office, calling or employment prohibited by the Act of Parliament of 7 and 8 Wm. III. for preventing frauds in the Plantation trade or in any other statute law of England. We likewise find that in Nov., 1697, Col. Benjamin Fletcher then Governor of the Province of New York granted letters of denization under the seal of the said Province unto one Arnold Nodine a foreigner, in which grant there is a clause to enable the said Nodine to take and hold lands, tenements, hereditaments, etc. to himself, his heirs and assigns in fee simple with power to sue and be sued and to enjoy all other rights and privileges as a natural born subject of that Province without any restriction or regard to the said Act of Navigation or any other statute of England: but we do not find that the said Col. Fletcher had any express power by his Commission to grant any letters of denization.

The outcome of this report was the order in Council which was issued on the 18th of Jan., 1700 in which in accordance with the said report it was laid down that the usual method of granting denization in the Plantations hath been by Acts of Assembly and that the Governors of the Plantations ought not to grant letters of denization unless they were expressly authorized so to do by their commissions and that no Act of denization or naturalization in any of the Plantations will qualify any person to be master of a ship within any of the statutes made in this kingdom which require masters of ships to be Englishmen (Calendar of State Papers Colonial, 1700, p. 34).

Accordingly circular letters to this effect were sent to the Governors of all the colonies (ibid., pp. 71, 73-4). In reply to one such letter Governor Grey, Governor of Barbados, replied that he had made no naturalizations during his government. In Oct. of the same year, 1700, the Earl of Bellomont Governor of New York in a long despatch proposed to the home government inter al as follows:

Foreigners coming daily of divers nations especially Dutch, Swedes and French 'tis humbly offered that a general law of naturalization pass in England that such that come to inhabit in any of the king's colonies that are by Act of Assembly declared freemen in the said Province shall enjoy the rights and privileges of English subjects except being masters or commanders of vessels and ships of trade (Ibid., p. 599).

In the frame of mind in which the home Parliament was at this time there was not the remotest prospect of any such Act passing and herein for once the Executive reflected its animus. In Dec. of the same year, 1700, the Council of Trade and Plantations read the Governor of Antigua a lecture on the subject of the wording of an Act for naturalizing David Sweigle of

INTRODUCTION.

Antigua surgeon and Martin Frett of the same, aliens born, the said Act being dated Feb., 1697.

The words of this Act expressing that the said persons shall be capable to do all manner of act and acts, thing and things with as great freedom as if they had been born within this Island [Antigua] or any other of his Majesty's dominions are too general and by no means fit to be allowed. But whereas the following clause does confine the whole effect of the Act to the Island of Antigua only it has been thought fit to pass it. However this ought to be a caution against expressions of too large extent in all future Acts of Naturalization. (Ibid., pp. 734-5, see also Hist. MSS., Report V., p. 228, report of the Attorney General to the Lords of Trade relative to an Act of Naturalization passed in the Colonies dated 8 March, 1703 and ibid., report from same to same on an Act passed in New York for a general naturalization of foreign Protestants dated 2 Jan., 1718).

We have therefore reached the same point in the Plantation law as has been detailed in the Irish law of this subject. Starting with the same juristic basis of mediæval law and with the same equipment of executive machinery both Ireland and the Plantations drifted apart from the mother country in this matter partly from the development of local feeling on their part but mainly from the motive of trade jealousy on the part of the mother country. That the result was not destined to prove exactly parallel in both cases was due to accident. The desire to promote the Moravian Brotherhood settlement in Georgia induced the government of Geo. II. to momentarily take a wider view of the matter. It would be an undoubted inducement to such settlers if they were made denizens not only of the colony to which they were going but of the mother country also. The Act of 13 Geo. II., c 7 (1740) breathes quite a different spirit from that which had hitherto prevailed as between England and the colonies in this matter. This Act is also of special importance for the present publication. It is entitled an Act for naturalizing such foreign Protestants as are or shall settle in any of his Majesty's colonies in America and it provides that such foreigners living for 7 years in any such colonies are on taking the oaths and the Sacrament to be deemed natives of this kingdom (England) provided they be not absent out of the said colony more than two months at a time. A certificate of such naturalization is to be given and the Secretary of such colony is to return to the Office of Trade and Plantation in London a yearly list of all persons entitled under the Act. It is this record which is printed in Vol. II. of the present work. The Act concludes with the proviso that no such persons shall hereby be entitled to be of the Privy Council of Parliament or to hold office of trust under or receive grants of land from the Crown—the usual proviso in all these 17th and 18th century Acts.

The only difference which the Act of 20 Geo. II., c. 44, made to this Act was to allow of an affirmation of fidelity and abjuration in place of the oaths; and similarly the later Act of 13 Geo. III., c. 25 (1773) strengthens the original Act still further by removing the proviso as to offices of trust and grants of land.

It is clear therefore that whatever the Act of 13 Geo. II., c 7, may be held to mean it remained the statute law of England on this subject as far as the American colonies are concerned up to the time of their revolt.

It is therefore not a little strange that the returns of yearly certificates should stop short soon after the accession of Geo. III. Why this is I cannot at present explain unless it is that as generally happened with the paper regulations of the mother country the colonies observed them as long as they thought fit and no longer.

The only subsequent legislation on this subject before the revolt was the Act of 2 Geo. III., c. 25, and like the co-eval English legislation intended for England only it has a merely opportunist and passing import. This Act naturalizes such foreign Protestants as well officers as soldiers as have or shall serve in the Royal American Regiment or as engineers in America for two years on taking the oath and subscribing the declaration as in 1 Geo. I., c 13, and taking the Sacrament. Such persons were hereby declared natural born subjects of this kingdom [i.e., England, not merely the Colonies]. The Act contains also the same proviso as in 13 Geo. II., c 7, but this also was swept away by the above cited Act of 13 Geo. III., c 25.

Finally the Act contains no provision for the registering the names of persons entitled under the same so that it is very doubtful whether any record of such persons could now be recovered.

As a result of so brief a survey of the English and Plantation law of naturalization it is permissible to conclude that the process of bifurcation or drifting apart which evidenced itself so strongly in the 17th century and up to 1740 was thereafter reversed and remedied and that from the latter date a colonial grant of naturalization would carry with it rights co-extensive with the empire. To this extent therefore the final result achieved was different in the Colonies from that which was produced in Ireland.

The presumption further can only be that this result so achieved applied to Canada and lived on as valid after the revolt of the thirteen colonies and that till the era of the modern legislation the Canadian executive administration could grant naturalizations carrying with them rights in England.

With regard to the revolted colonies one most curious anomaly resulted from the declaration of Independence. As members of an independent and sometimes hostile state the American citizen could surely no longer be considered an Englishman. But they were never so declared by the English legislative or executive and as a consequence the American citizens of the time of the revolt must be held to have continued Englishmen until their death.

The modern legislation on the subject of colonial naturalization marks a return to the separatist and disruptive spirit of the 17th century. Practically the colonies are left to do their own without any grand guiding principle which should make for uniformity. The Act of 10 and 11 Vict., c 83 (22 July, 1847) provides that the Acts, statutes and ordinances of colonial legislatures be confirmed regardless of doubts as to the competency of such legislatures herein and as to the invalidity of such Acts, etc. and it further provides that all such hereafter to be made shall be valid, subject to confirmation or disallowance by the Queen as in the case of other laws. This general principle was again re-asserted in the naturalization Act of 1870 (33 and 34 Vict., c 14). From this point onwards each colony whether self governing or Crown governed has gone its own way and has built up a motley hued structure of law on the subject. A resume of the whole of these colonial laws up to 1900 is printed in the report of the Inter departmental Naturalization Acts Committee of 1899 which was published in 1901 (ed. 723). It is much too bulky and intricate to be extracted here.

In conclusion there only remain to be noticed two outlying portions of the dominion which enter historically into the period covered by the present work, viz. the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

In the Isle of Man from the earliest times all except Manxmen and Englishmen were regarded as aliens. In 1429 for instance at a Court of all the Commons of Man Scotchmen and Irishmen are spoken of as aliens and neither they nor other aliens were to be resident in the Island unless they be sworn to the Lieutenant and to the land of Man. (The sovereignty of the house of Derby is immaterial to the point). In 1696 this ancient principle was overthrown in order to the encouragement of all foreigners and strangers to reside in the Island and it was provided in the most delightfully vague and general terms that all and every person whether subjects of the kingdom of Scotland or Ireland or any foreigners or strangers of any other kingdoms or nations in amity with the Crown of England coming into this Isle to reside shall for the future have and enjoy the same immunities, privileges and advantages that any of the subjects or inhabitants of England have or hereafter shall or may have.

This absurdly worded law can under no construction be held as having effect outside the Isle of Man.

In Guernsey from the earliest times letters of naturalization were granted by the Governor under his hand and seal. Persons who received such letters are spoken of in the Ordinances as "naturalizez sujets de la Majesté de la Reyne d'Angleterre notre souveraine." But these words can have application only to the Island itself. So much is not merely reasonable but also proved by the terms of a letter dated 26 Nov., 1687 from the Earl of Sunderland, Secretary of State, conveying the commands of James II. to the Bailiff and Jurats of the Island to cause Debourg Simon to be naturalized "in that our Island of Guernsey."

In 1661 an order of the King in Council dated Whitehall, 22 March, 1660-1 was passed requiring that the oaths of allegiance and supremacy be administered in the island of Guernsey as the same are ordained to be taken for England by the several Acts of Parliament of force in England made for the purpose.

This would certainly imply that naturalizations had hitherto been granted without the formality of the oaths.

Practically the law remains the same to-day for the ordinances of 1726 and 1821 (which are printed in the above quoted report, pp. 72-3) do not bear on the subject of naturalization. They bear only on poor law regulations as to domicile. In the same way the curious case of Anthoine Isemonger (ibid., p. 71) who being a subject of the British king and native of Arundel applied in 1771 to be received an inhabitant of the parish of Saint Pierre-Port seems to turn on the question of domicile and not upon that of nationality. The fact that in this case the oaths were not administered would seem to show that as an Englishman he was not regarded as a foreigner in Guernsey and that his application had relation only to some coveted trading privileges. If this is so it may throw some light on the position of the English in Ireland under the Act of 14 and 15 Car., c 113, supra, pp. xxii-xxiii.

PART II. DOCUMENTARY SOURCES.

The documentary sources from which Denization entries are drawn are the Patent Rolls and the subsidiary series of records which preceded the grant and its enrolment. The first stage would be the presentation of applicant's petition. These petitions are not preserved. If favourably entertained the preparation of the grant followed the usual routine. (A) the Signet bill ordering the grant to be drawn up. This stage is represented by a twofold set of records, viz., a brief entry in the Signet Office Docquet Book under the date of the month (without the day of the month) the name of the applicant and the name of the Secretarial clerk who procured the bill. And secondly the bill itself is still frequently, but not always, to be found among the Privy Seals Chancery usually under the month or the next succeeding month after the date of the Signet Office entry, and also in the series known as S.P. Dom. Docquets (for which see infra). (B) the Privy Seal itself with the usual recordaturs and memoranda upon it. These documents are also preserved among the Privy Seals Chancery. (C) the Patent Roll entry.

All these sources whether indicted or not in the references have been worked simultaneously for the present publication. It might be reasonably expected that in every case they would correspond with and reproduce each other. But this is by no means so. In some cases an applicant may have ceased to pursue his application or he might fail to pay the fees due in the Secretary's Office. If so the Signet Office Book entry will stand alone and the subsequent proceedings will not be represented. In this case (which is not infrequent in the present volume) it would be difficult to say whether the person in question was actually endenized or not. Irrespective of this fact all such entries are preserved in the present volume. If an entry of a name has no other authority than the Signet Office Book it is to be understood that there is no further record. In a similar way there are not a few privy seals in existence (and recorded in the following pages) which are not enrolled on the Patent Roll. The explanation is a double one. Either the grant after passing the Privy Seal did not succeed in passing the Great Seal (for what reason we can only conjecture) or after having actually so passed the grantee may not through his own niggardliness as to the fees or through the carelessness of his attorney have proceeded to the enrolment.

In the following pages where the authority for a grant includes only the Signet Office Docquet and the Privy Seals Chancery it is to be understood that the entry was not enrolled on the Patent Roll. But in such cases the presumption is very strong that the grant would be held valid in a modern court of law.

The routine sketched above is the normal one for the whole of the period of the present work. But during the few years in the reign of Charles II. and James II. a special departure was permitted for merely humanitarian motives at the time of the great emigration. During this period denization was granted without fee by certificate of the Secretary of State. This matter is sufficiently explained on pp. 124-5 of the present volume. (The modern routine of Home Office Certificates and advertisement in the Gazette does not enter into the limits of the present work).

There is only one other matter necessary to be mentioned in connexion with Denizations. One of the many forms of conferring cheap favours (or extinguishing debts) under James I.

and Charles I. was to grant to particular individuals the right of making so many denizens. (A doubtless incomplete list of such grants is given in the footnote hereto).*

This procedure is to be understood merely as meaning that the person so favoured was granted the right of extorting money from persons who wished to get grants of denization. He would make his private arrangements with the applicants and would then run the grants through the usual offices. It most certainly does not mean that he could issue a grant in his own name. If he were granted the right of making 30 denizens he might wait until he had a complete list of 30 applicants ready and then send them in en bloc or he might send them in piecemeal into the office. There will be found many entries in the present volume in the time of James I. concluding with the word 'made at the request of' so and so; or 'these are part of the 30 denizations granted to' so and so.

All these grants therefore ought to be represented in the following pages. But there is a suspicion in my mind, arising from the painful collation of all this material, that occasionally informal blocks of grants may have been issued under this arrangement without proper record of them being kept.

If this should prove to be so it may explain the fact that occasionally the series known as S.P. Dom. Docquets contains entries of denizations which do not appear in the Signet Office Docquet Book. For instance, Peter Rochefort infra under date 1630, Feb. 28, p. 44 and the 13 names following, Cornelius Johnson infra under date 1637, Nov., p. 57 are taken from the S.P. Dom. Docquets. No entry of them occurs in the Signet Office Docquet Book. Similarly in the case of Vernatti under date 1631, March, infra, p. 44-5 the names of his partners are given in a State Paper Domestic but do not appear in the Signet Office Docquet Book.

As to the entries of the Irish denizations they have been abstracted for the purposes of the present publication by Miss Gertrude Thrift direct from the Patent Rolls preserved in the Record Office, Dublin Castle. I have collated the abstract with a transcript of Lodge's transcript of portions of these entries. (For an account of the Lodge MSS. see the 26th Report of the Deputy Keeper of Records, Ireland).

As to Naturalizations the authority is in every case the private bill itself which has been abstracted from the original in the House of Lords. But it is to be understood that in this case also there are initial and intermediate stages and that these stages are represented either by entries in the Journals of each House or in the Committee Records. As to the latter of these, the Committee Records, it is only at a comparatively late date that they are available. But it will be seen from the footnotes from p. 215 onwards how valuable the notices are. For it was by no means infrequent for names to be added to or struck out of a naturalization bill in Committee; and apart from this the Committee inspected and kept an entry of the applicant's Sacramental certificate (which usually gives the name of the congregation to which he was attached) and his services if any in the king's army or navy.

As to the former, namely, the entries in the Journals, which with the aid of my wife I have worked through systematically for the purpose of this volume, it is to be understood that many Acts were brought in which never passed and in the case of these at least some of the names are recorded in the debates of one or the other house. All these moribund bills are preserved in the following pages under the title of "Naturalization Bills which did not become law." They are given in the same chronological sequence as the Naturalization Acts themselves. Finally where a bill did pass and become an Act the debates upon it frequently reveal changes and substitutions of names or again biographical details or again indications of the temper of the Commons or the Lords which are of peculiar interest. In order to make accessible all this material I have printed at the head of each Bill or Act the legislative history of it as it is revealed in the Journals and the references by page and volume for every stage in the passing of the bill. The toil has been endless but it has resulted in the discovery of names, entries and historical facts which could never have been made accessible if I had restricted myself to the mere list of actually passed private Acts.

Finally the collation of so many concurrent sources as are described above both for denizations and naturalizations has brought to light a heart-breaking want of uniformity in the spelling of the names. Whether the documents or entries are in English or Latin they were made by clerks who were too busy to take the trouble of collating and verifying and who must have been sorely puzzled by many of the names. The result is chaos and darkness worse than Egyptian. All that I could do was to note the variants, printing them in brackets and to make a despairing attempt in the index to bring the variants together and to co-ordinate them tentatively. Let not the result appear in judgment against me, for the task is a well-nigh impossible one.

It only remains to acknowledge very gratefully help most kindly given by M. S. Guiseppi, Esq., S. C. Ratcliff, Esq. and R. D. Dunlop, Esq., and above all my dear wife without whose help I could never have accomplished this work.

There is a previous entry in the Signet Office Docquet Book, under date 1630-1, March, as follows, but it appears to have remained inoperative, and the above entry was probably substituted for it. "Sir Fillibert Vernatty, Kt., and others strangers born, and is to enable them to hold such lands as shall be allotted to them in Hatfield Chase, His Majesty having heretofore, by contract under the Great Seal, agreed with Cornelius Vermuyden, Kt., that all his partners in draining said Hatfield Chase should be enabled by His Majesty to hold such lands as should fall to their share," with a marginal note, dated 1631, Nov. "The bill signed of this was delivered to Sir Robert Heath's man to be new passed, and the signet thereof remains upon the file."

Under the date 1630, June 1, the State Papers Domestic, CLXVIII., No. 3, contain the following paper:—

'Petition of Sir Corneleus Vermuyden.' By agreement with petitioner dated 1626, May 24, the king granted to petitioner one third of lands in Hatfield Chase and other places in Co. York, Lincoln, and Notts; and all persons by petitioner appointed to have such lands conveyed to them were to be enabled thereto: therefore prays denization for the following 18 to enable them to hold said lands. At the Court at Whitehall, June 1, 1630, His Majesty is graciously pleased to grant this petitioner's request for the denization of the parties above named, if it appear that his Majesty hath already made it part of his contract upon the draining of the lands above said; and that caution being had that under colour of denization they shall make no benefit thereof to the prejudice of his Majesty in his customs, or in any course of merchandise (whereof the Lord Treasurer is to have notice that his lordship may give order to the customers as shall be meet on that behalf.) *Petition of Col. Gravell, of Maidstone, Kent, to the Protector. Being born in the King of Spain's dominions, near Flanders, and a Protestant, I have sheltered 20 years in England for liberty of religion, married an English wife, and maintained her four children many years as a peltmaker; but the hatters of London, and the haberdashers about me have lately disturbed me, on pretence that strangers are forbidden by law to exercise any calling. Having always behaved well, I beg to be allowed to maintain myself. With note of reference. [1 page.] Annexing:—

1. Lambard Godfrey to Lord Phil Jones, one of the Privy Council. I beg your favour for Gravel, born in Hainault. He and his father came here 20 years since, and have traded according to patents in time of the late Kings, which liberties in the late Protector's time Parliament recommended Council to take care of, on which letters were written to the Lord Mayor. He has been several times prosecuted lately, and now in the Exchequer Court. Cases of this kind are important, and the man is diligent and orderly. [1½ pages.] (2) Oct. 26. ### NATURALIZATION BILLS WHICH DID NOT BECOME ACTS.

(The first session of the second Parliament of Charles II. lasted from 8 May, 1661, to 19 May, 1662, including an adjournment from 30 July, 1661, to 20 November, 1661. Both the acts which passed (as above) and the bills which did not pass in this long session are here brought together and should be properly styled 13-14 Car. II. They are then followed by the Denizations respectively of 13 Car. II., and 14 Car. II. But in the Statute Book those of the acts of this session which passed in 1661 are styled acts of 1661, and those which passed in 1662 are styled acts of 1662. I consider this nomenclature incorrect and that they should be included in one enumeration, as of 13-14 Car. II.)

*L. J., XII., 84-5, 22 Jan., 1666-7. Viscount Saye and Sele reported from the Lords' Committee "that the Committee have considered of the case of Sir Richard Fanshawe in the Bill mentioned among the persons to be naturalized, and finding that it was the desire and directions of his father Sir Richard Fanshawe upon his deathbed, that his son should be naturalized, their Lordships thought fit to continue his name in the said Bill, though they were not fully satisfied whether this may not in future be urged to the prejudice of children of Ambassadors, born in foreign countries, and therefore are of opinion that rather the Judges' opinions might be had in the case, or else that the particular cause of his being naturalized might be entered into the journal of this House, to the end it may not be brought in precedent to the prejudice of others." Upon this the House ordered that such judges as are in town should meet this afternoon to consider this case and to report their opinion, whether the son of an Ambassador employed by the King in foreign parts be an alien or no. (Ibid., p. 86. 23 Jan., 1666-7.) "This day according to the order of this House yesterday Judge Twisden reported that the Judges have met, and upon consideration of that order the opinion of the Judges is that the children of Ambassadors (employed by the King), born in foreign countries, are no aliens."

Memorandum. That the retaining the name of Sir Richard Fanshawe, an infant born in Spain (son of Sir Richard Fanshawe, Bart., His Majesty's late Ambassador there), in the bill for naturalizing Dame Mary Frazer and others, is according to the direction and desire of the said Sir Richard Fanshawe, upon his deathbed, to have his son naturalized and not intended by this House to be prejudicial to any children for the future as may challenge the privilege of being children of Ambassadors, born in foreign countries, employed in His Majesty's service."

†On the 4 Jan., 1666-7, the Lords in committee ordered the following 2 names to be inserted into the Bill "when they have taken the oath of supremacy and allegiance." Their names do not appear in the Act:

From July 1681 to Aug. 1688 we possess a double series of Denizations. (1) Those made specially under the Order in Council of 28 July, 1681. (2) The ordinary series entered in the usual sources, viz., Docquet Books, Privy Seals and Patent Rolls. Broadly speaking the difference between these two series is that the first represents grants to persecuted Huguenots who left France for the sake of their religion and conscience, whilst the second represents the usual annual casual denizations of foreigners coming from all or any foreign country and settling in England for any purpose whatever, trade, traffic or what not. But this distinction is by no means consistently applicable, as names which occur in the first series, which do not as a rule appear on the Patent Rolls, are sometimes found duplicated in the second series viz. on the Patent Rolls. I am unable to explain this duplication unless it was that the individuals concerned deliberately chose to pay for and have their patents enrolled on the Patent Roll for greater security to them and their heirs. Again there are occasionally on the Patent Rolls long lists of persecuted Huguenots whose names do not appear in the Secretary of State's Entry Book—just the reverse of what we should have expected. It is evident that there was much confusion in the official methods of preparing the grants. As far as the various offices were concerned the general distinction between the two sets of grants was that the first were granted without payment of any fees whilst the ordinary Patent Roll series were liable to the usual fees in all the offices through which the grant passed in the process of manufacture. The special series of Denizations has been already printed in Cooper's Foreigners Resident in England (Camden Society O.S. No. 82), but Cooper's Vol. was in many places faulty. A fresh collation of the original MS has been made and the lists are here reprinted verbatim.

The Order in Council instituting this special series of Denizations was as follows.

At the Court at Hampton Court, this 28th day of July, 1681, Present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

His Ma<sup>ty</sup>, by His Ord<sup>r</sup> in Council of y<sup>e</sup> 21st of July instant, having been graciously pleased to referre a Memorial p<sup>s</sup>ented to His Ma<sup>ty</sup> in behalf of y<sup>e</sup> distressed Protestants abroad, to y<sup>e</sup> consideraçon of y<sup>e</sup> R<sup>t</sup> Hon<sup>ble</sup> y<sup>e</sup> L<sup>ds</sup> Com<sup>tees</sup> of this Board for Trade and Plantaçons, wth direcçons to report their opinion thereupon, and their Lordships having this day made their report to His Majesty in Council; His Majesty upon due consideration thereof had, was pleased to declare, that he holdes himselfe obliged in honour and conscience to comfort and support all such afflicted Protestants, who, by reason of y<sup>e</sup> rigours and severitys which are vs<sup>d</sup> towards them upon y<sup>e</sup> account of their religion, shall be forced to quitt their native country, and shall desire to shelter themselves under His Ma<sup>ty</sup>s Royall protection for y<sup>e</sup> preservaçon and free exercise of their religion. WILLIAM DE NASSAU, Lord Zulestein, both of the Hague in Holland.

ADRIAN VAN BORSELEN, of the Province of Zealand.

HENRY BENTINK, now Earle of Portland of the age of nyne yeares, late of the Hague in Holland.

*The procedure on this Bill was curious. On the 25 March the Earl of Shrewsbury moved for leave to bring in a Bill for this purpose. It accordingly appeared in the Lords' House on the 27 March, 1689, as an act for exhibiting a Bill in this present Parliament for naturalizing the said Prince. This first or preliminary Bill passed all three readings in the Lords on March 27, similarly passed the Commons on the 28 and received the royal assent on the 3 April. See L. J. XIV., 160, 163. C. J. IX., 68, 69, 78. Hist. MSS. Com. Reports, XII. V.I., 71. Accordingly the act itself for naturalizing the Prince and settling his precedency was introduced into the Lords on the 3 April, passed the Lords on the 5, the Commons on the 6 and received the royal assent on the 9 April. See L. J. XIV., 166, 168. C. J. IX., 78, 81, 82, 85. Whilst still in Committee in the Lords on the 3 April the following changes were made in the Bill. The original preamble runs as follows:—"Whereas the [Royal line as well as the virtues of the Most Noble Prince George of Denmark did justly entitle him to the marriage of Her Royal Highness the Princess Ann, and that his Highness has] ever since," etc. The Bill originally ended with this clause:—"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the robes of the said Prince, both in and out of Parliament, shall be distinguished from the Robes of all other Peers of this realm by the addition of two bars of "Ermine extraordinary". The Committee met this day, and after amending the Bill by omitting the words first included above in square brackets, and substituting the words in the Act, Mr. King, the Herald, was called in, and being asked whether the Prince, as an English Duke, was to have different robes from another Duke, he replied in the negative. The final clause, as above, was then omitted. (Hist. MSS. Com. Report, XII., VI., p. 74), and this omission was agreed to by the House of Lords on the following day. (L. J., XIV., p. 167).

EDWARD HARVEY, an infant, was omitted from the Bill because his friends do refuse to pay the fees for the Bill. See C. J. X., 117, 121, 126, 129, 130, 136, 165, 193. L. J. XIV., 216, 224, 227.)

ANN ASTLEY, born at Emerick in the land of Cleve, formerly in the States of Holland's dominions, but now in the dominions of the elector of Brandenburg, being a person born out of your Majesty's allegiance as well as Edward Astley her father, daughter of Edward Astley and Margarette Hartevelt, his wife deceased. WILLIAM WATTS, three years of age, born at Rotterdam in the Province of Holland, vnder the Dominion of the States Generall of the Vnited Provinces, son of Joseph Watts and Rebecca, his wife.

(*Bill introduced into the Commons on the 6 Dec., 1689. Rogerson took the oaths on the same day. The Bill passed the Commons on the 12 Dec., and the Lords on the 16 Dec., and received the Royal assent on the same day. See C. J. X., 302, 303, 305, 306, 310. L. J. XIV., 370, 371, 372, 373. ## NATURALIZATION ACTS.

5° et 6° Gul. et Mar., No. 47.

(Bill read a first time in the Lords 28 Mar., 1694, as a Bill for the Offarells only, passed the Lords 31 Mar., and the Commons on the 19 April, with the addition of the eight names, and finally passed both Houses 21 April, 1694. See L. J. XV., 405, 406, 407, 408. 421, 422. C. J. XI., 146, 148, 152, 153, 161, 166, 167, 169. For the proceedings of the Lords' Committee see the foot note below. The Bill received the royal assent on the 25 April.)

*JOHANNA D'OFFARRELL,

*The Bill was returned to the Lords from the Commons, with the addition of eight names as above on 19 April. On 21 April, Counsel was called in on the Petition of R. Peirce against the Commons' amendments. Sir Bartholomew Shore (for petitioner): We pray these gentlemen may be still subject to the same duties, as if they were not naturalised. This man is undone, if these men be naturalised, and put in as amendments at the House of Commons. They will colour others' as well as their own impositions. Sir Thomas Powys (for the persons added to the Bill). These are fit aliens. If not to receive the advantages of home-born, in the city of London he is a foreigner. No Bill of Naturalisation had ever such a clog. Counsel withdrew, and the petition was dismissed. Commons' Amendments agreed to, and Bill read a third time and passed.

Annexed:—

(a). 19 April, 1694. Papers (numbered one to six) giving the names, parentage and birth place of the eight persons added by the Commons to the Bill, together with certificates, appended to the several papers, of their having received the Sacrament. The names are given here as follows:—

1. ABEL TASSIN D'ALLONNE. He or his father, of the same Christian name, was made principal Secretary and Master of Requests to the Queen in 1689. Luttrell (3 April, 1689).
2. FREDERICK WEYHMAN, described here as "a Captain of one of their Majesties' ships of war, son of Jan Weyhman, of Hamburg, deceased, late a colonel of horse in his Imperial Majesty's service." A Capt. Weyman, was tried and cashiered in 1694 for disobeying M. Caermarthen's orders at Brest. Luttrell, 30 Aug., 1694.
3. DANIEL KROGER, merchant.

1. On 8 April, 1694, at the Parish Church of St. Martins-in-Fields. Dated eod. die. Signed Nich. Gouge, D.D., Vicar, and Tho. Apthorp, churchwarden. Attested by Thomas Wickins and James Gordon.

  6. On 9 April, 1694, at the Dutch Church in London. Dated eod. die. Signed Samuel Biscop, minister. Attested by J. Joyce, junr. and Tho. London. Three certificates.
- (b). 19 April, 1694.—Petition of Richard Peirce, Esq. Petitioner is farmer and collector of the ancient duties of Paccage, Scavage, Balliage, and Portage, payable by aliens only, for their wares and merchandizes imported into or exported out of the city of London, and the ports and liberties thereof, by grant under the city at a yearly rent of £1,200. Those duties are the ancient inheritance of the city, confirmed to them by divers Acts of Parliament, and being but small sums, are of little consequence to any particular person, but are a considerable part of the city's revenues. The impairing and lessening them by a naturalisation of aliens will disable Petitioner from paying the said rent, and consequently the city from answering the settlement lately made by Parliament for the orphans and creditors of the city. Several persons lately added by the Commons to the Bill for naturalising are merchants and traders, in whose names and through whose means many goods of their own and other aliens will be coloured and imported and exported, and thereby the duties greatly lessened, if not totally destroyed. Prays for some provision for saving the rights of the city and petitioner to the duties. Endorsed as read this day. L. J. XV., 421.
- (c). 21 April, 1694. Engrossed proviso as follows: Provided always and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to exempt any of the persons who shall claim any benefit by this Act from the payment unto the Mayor, commonalty and citizens of the city of London, any of the duties collected at the Custom House and heretofore lawfully received and enjoyed by them (and now appropriated by Act of Parliament for the payment of the orphans' debts), but that the same shall still be paid as if this Act had not been made. Endorsed as rejected this day upon hearing.
- (c).<sup>1</sup> Duplicate of above. No endorsement.
- Luttrell, under date 1 April, 1693, has the following: "The Lord Mayor Aldermen and Common Council have under consideration an Act to restrain hawkers and pedlars, which would be of use to the traders within the same." (Hist. M. Com. Report House of Lords new series I. pp. 378, 380.)

10<sup>o</sup> Gul. III., No. 83.

(Bill introduced into the Commons 10 Mar., 1698-9, and read a first time there 11 Mar.; passed the Commons Mar. 20; read a first time in the Lords same day; amended in the Lords on 24 April, 1699, by the addition of names; returned to the Commons with amendments April 25, being a long addition of names given in C. J. XII., 665; amendments disagreed to by the Commons April 26; conference held thereon by the two Houses April 29, and a second conference on May 1; the Commons waived their disagreement on May 3, and on that day the Bill finally passed, and received the royal assent on May 4. See C. J. XII., 558, 562, 585, 587, 590, 591, 602, 665-7, 671, 672, 674, 675, 681. L. J. XVI., 407, 409, 410, 447, 449, 457, 462, 466. The Commons' reasons for disagreeing with the Lords' amendment were as follows (C. J. XII., 671):

The Commons cannot agree to the Lords' amendment wherein your Lordships have added near fourscore persons to their Bill; which they cannot agree to; not only because it is without precedent to add so very great a number by way of amendment, but it is also a method they can by no means approve of being thereby hindered of an opportunity of informing themselves of the condition, circumstances, and merits, of the persons so proposed to be naturalized; of which they would be very well apprised, before they can consent to so large an addition to their Bill.

The Commons also cannot agree with your Lordships in this amendment; because there are so many English officers and soldiers out of employment since the late reducing and disbanding the Army; and, by your Lordships' amendment, so great a number of foreigners will be put into an equal capacity with Englishmen, of being employed in His Majesty's Service; which, they think, was not your Lordships' intention.

The Lords' reasons for insisting on their amendments were reported to the Commons on the 1st May as follows: Their Lordships have as much consideration as the Commons can desire, of the English officers and soldiers now out of employment, since the late reducing and disbanding the Army, whom they would always have preferred before any foreigners; but they cannot but hope, that, since this Bill was intended by the Commons for the benefit of those foreigners that were at first put into the Bill, because, as their lordships conceive, they had served long and faithfully in the English troops, that the Commons will, upon the same grounds, agree to those added by the Lords' amendments, they being found to be in the same circumstances.

For these reasons, and on this account, their Lordships do insist on their amendments, except only as to Gerrard Van Hesta, and George William Krond, whom they do agree to leave out of this Bill, because the one being a Kettledrummer, and the other a Trumpeter, they are provided for, in a clause sent up by the Commons, to be added to the Bill for naturalizing Samuel Bernardeau and others; which is agreed to by the Lords. (C. J. VII., 674).

To these reasons the Lords appended a statement of services or other merits of the individual persons. In the present text these statements of services are added in brackets after the names concerned from Persode p. 281 down to Raffan p. 286.

The general entry for the taking of the oaths is given on p. 585 and 602, Vol. XII., of the Commons' Journals where the names show several variations from the text as below. These variants are here inserted in brackets. In connexion with this Bill the following names occur as taking the oaths, but their names do not appear in the Bill :

INDEX.

Index.

In the following index all possible variants are brought together under one main heading, with cross references from such variants to such main heading. Among such variants many will be found which cannot possibly be acknowledged as true variants of the main heading under which they are gathered. The reason for their inclusion is that such variants actually occur in the manuscripts. They are to be ascribed to the difficulty which the English Chancery clerks of the seventeenth century experienced in writing down these French forms of names.
